10...h6 A rare move, which was played by Vishy Anand against Veselin Topalov in their World Championship match. At first I was s2eptical, but later I came to appreciate this move, which does little to challenge the centre, but solves the problem of where to put Black's light-squared bishop, which often can't find a good place. In comparison, the very popular 10...♗d7 looks really weird to me - I just can't understand what the bishop is doing there.

' 11.Bh4 Levon is not impressed, and decides to take the pawn on offer. When I was analyzing this variation a couple of months ago, I came to the same conclusion that this was the critical continuation. Perhaps I was a little too keen to listen to the machine's advice; now I would be less likely to endorse a move which ruins White's pawn structure and opens all the lines for Black's pieces. A) 14...Ng4 1.02/19 14...Bg4 0.43 And a draw! Black will just trade pawns with ...g4 and come back with his king in time. This was an extremely exciting game. Aronian played the first half of the game in great style and slowly improved a slightly better position. However, in the second half he began making many mistakes and missing win after win. Grischuk, on the other hand, defended extremely tenaciously after his initial unconvincing play. It will be interesting to see how the results of this game will affect the rest of the match - if Aronian will be put on the defensive after this disappointing draw. 15.Nf3! would have won. White just threatens to play c7. gxh4 1.41/20 (15...Be6 0.97/16 ) 16.Bxh4± , and Black can't stop c7. Qc7 17.e5;

B) 14...Bg4 A very calm positional move. Actually, this works reasonably well, but why not just take the knight immediately? 15.f3 Be6? The dramatic end of a long and difficult game. Levon once again had the win at his fingertips, but let it slip. With just one move he could have ended Black's stiff resistance. It's interesting to understand what he missed; I would venture to guess that he felt the pawn ending would be winning without calculating any details. This often happens after several hours of play - laziness sets in and you don't feel up to calculating variations. 16.hxg5 Nd7]

I can't imagine Levon overlooking this in his preparation, but I'm not sure what he missed, because Black got a perfect position in a few moves. 15.Nc4 White is trying to block the g7-bishop by playing f4 and e5. Unfortunately, he will never get the chance. 15...Qe7 Of course! This is why Black postponed playing ...a6.

7...c6 8.Bc4 0-0 9.Nd2 White has an edge. This is not such a common move, but it has been played before by strong players.

[9.Qh5 with more complications. a5 10.a4 Bb4 11.Bh4]

9...d5 10.exd5 cxd5 11.Bb3 a5!? An unusual square for this knight in the Ruy, but here I think the move makes a lot of sense. I'm just trying to maintain control over d5. 12.a4 It's not easy to find a move for White.

[12.a3 a4 13.Ba2 Ra6 14.Re1 Rg6 15.Bh4 Bg4 16.f3 I thought Black would be better here, but after (16.Qc1 -0.61/20 16.Nf3 -0.12 Qd7) 16...Be6 the ending is just unclear.

12...Ra6!? A little bit optimistic and not really necessary.

[12...Be6 13.Re1 Ra6 and here I only considered 27.♘c3, but the accurate 14.Nf1! forces a draw. Qd7 15.Ng3! Ng6 16.h3 f6 17.Bd2 , with perpetual. C61: Ruy Lopez: Bird's Defence
ChessPublishing: 'Paul Motwani: 'G13. 70: "What a stunning Bird!" The title of this game could refer to someone who's extremely beautiful, but I hope you'll settle instead for seeing a really attractive win involving 1 e4 e5 2 Nf3 Nc6 3 Bb5 Nd4, which is Bird's Defence to the Ruy Lopez or "Spanish Opening". Way back in the 19th century, that bold third move for Black was employed very successfully on a number of occasions by England's Henry Edward Bird (14.7. 1830-11.4.1908), and it's well-covered in GM Glenn Flear's new 144-page Everyman book, "Offbeat Spanish": a highly readable paperback which examines all of the most important alternatives to 3...a6 in the Ruy Lopez. I've chosen and annotated the following fantastic GM-encounter from my own personal files, but lots of other equally tasty goodies can be found in Glenn Flear's aforementioned new work, priced at 14.99 (UK pounds)." 1.e4 e5 2.Nf3 Nc6 3.Bb5 Nd4 4.Nxd4 exd4 5.Bc4 Nf6 6.Qe2 Bc5 7.d3N

Blitz 3min+1sec C61: Ruy Lopez: Bird's Defence
Early in my chess career, I was an e4 player. I had been told that it was the best match for my aggressive style. As I got more mature, I realized that I was feeling very at home against the Sicilian and the French, but I had no idea how to play against e5 (or c6, but this is for another day!). Ultimately, when I was about 2400 FIDE, I started making the transition from 1. e4 to 1.d4 as an antidote to my difficulties meeting 1...e5. As of now, I have been playing d4 almost exclusively for a couple years. However, with all the unsatisfying games I had in the Scotch or the King's Gambit behind me, I think that I will learn a lot by studying the Ruy Lopez, both in terms of improving my understanding in positions that don't come as naturally to me and potentially reincorporating 1.e4 back into my repertoire. After some discussions with Chess Informant, it has been agreed that I will present some of the fruits of my analysis of the Ruy Lopez as I properly learn it for the first time. I should mention, this series is aimed at finding the best plans for white and it is done from white's perespective, but I will try to be as objective as possible in my evaluations. I believe that with any new opening, it is most important to learn the sidelines first, so we will start off where black deviates from the normal 3...a6 or 3...Nf6, in particular with regard to the Nd4 motif. Enjoy! Chess Informant: 'Early in my chess career, I was an e4 player. I had been told that it was the best match for my aggressive style. Blitz 5min+1sec C61: Ruy Lopez: Bird's Defence
Early in my chess career, I was an e4 player. I had been told that it was the best match for my aggressive style. As I got more mature, I realized that I was feeling very at home against the Sicilian and the French, but I had no idea how to play against e5 (or c6, but this is for another day!). Ultimately, when I was about 2400 FIDE, I started making the transition from 1. e4 to 1.d4 as an antidote to my difficulties meeting 1...e5. As of now, I have been playing d4 almost exclusively for a couple years. However, with all the unsatisfying games I had in the Scotch or the King's Gambit behind me, I think that I will learn a lot by studying the Ruy Lopez, both in terms of improving my understanding in positions that don't come as naturally to me and potentially reincorporating 1.e4 back into my repertoire. After some discussions with Chess Informant, it has been agreed that I will present some of the fruits of my analysis of the Ruy Lopez as I properly learn it for the first time. I should mention, this series is aimed at finding the best plans for white and it is done from white's perespective, but I will try to be as objective as possible in my evaluations. I believe that with any new opening, it is most important to learn the sidelines first, so we will start off where black deviates from the normal 3...a6 or 3...Nf6, in particular with regard to the Nd4 motif. Enjoy! Chess Informant: 'Early in my chess career, I was an e4 player. I had been told that it was the best match for my aggressive style. C61: Ruy Lopez: Bird's Defence
Schellenberg/Schlechter/Marco, Der 14. Kongress des DSB, S.137. "Heppe aus Buchholz"; Französisch-Buchholz? Early in my chess career, I was an e4 player. I had been told that it was the best match for my aggressive style. As I got more mature, I realized that I was feeling very at home against the Sicilian and the French, but I had no idea how to play against e5 (or c6, but this is for another day!). Ultimately, when I was about 2400 FIDE, I started making the transition from 1. e4 to 1.d4 as an antidote to my difficulties meeting 1...e5. As of now, I have been playing d4 almost exclusively for a couple years. However, with all the unsatisfying games I had in the Scotch or the King's Gambit behind me, I think that I will learn a lot by studying the Ruy Lopez, both in terms of improving my understanding in positions that don't come as naturally to me and potentially reincorporating 1.e4 back into my repertoire. After some discussions with Chess Informant, it has been agreed that I will present some of the fruits of my analysis of the Ruy Lopez as I properly learn it for the first time. I should mention, this series is aimed at finding the best plans for white and it is done from white's perespective, but I will try to be as objective as possible in my evaluations. I believe that with any new opening, it is most important to learn the sidelines first, so we will start off where black deviates from the normal 3...a6 or 3...Nf6, in particular with regard to the Nd4 motif. Enjoy! Chess Informant: 'Early in my chess career, I was an e4 player. I had been told that it was the best match for my aggressive style. C61: Ruy Lopez: Bird's Defence
1.e4 e5 2.Nf3
This move does many things:
1) it attacks the central D5-square;
2) it keeps the C-file open for the use of the heavy pieces;
3) it offers the queen a diagonal;
4) it restrains Black from establishing a pawn in the centre by 2 ... d5, as White's reply 3 cxd5 compelling a recapture with a piece would leave Black with no pawn in the centre.
2...Nc6
Black clears a path for the darksquared bishop.
3.Bb5
White develops the B1-knight first, to support an advance of the E-pawn.
3...Nd4
Black immediately clamps a pin on the knight. If White were to play 4 e4, then 4 ... Nxe4 would leave him helpless to recapture.
4.Nxd4
With a twofold purpose: (1) to meet 4 ... Bxc3+ with 5. Qxc3, keeping White's pawn structure intact, and (2) to threaten again the advance 5. e4.
Let us consider the position on the board. Besides the text-move (4. Qc2), there are at least seven excellent alternatives, each of which has enthusiastic advocates. They are: 4. Qb3; 4. Bd2; 4. a3; 4. Bg5; 4. e3; 4. g3; and 4. Nf3. Which of these is best? No one can say for sure, but the move that leads into positions congenial (compatible) to your style is the best move, and the one you should play.

4...exd4

Black too can conduct the defence (or the counterattack) in the manner that suits his style and temperament. The move he plays immediately disputes White's control of the centre. It does other things, too: it gives the queen more scope, opens the C-file, protects the bishop, etc.

However, there are other moves, equally effective, at Black's disposal. He can select from these replies, each of which has something to recommend it: 4 ... Nc6; 4 ... d6; 4 ... d5; 4 ... 0-0; and 4 ... b6. There is something for every taste.

Strongest for various reasons: White does not lose time in taking the pawn, as Black in recapturing will return the lost tempo. The open D-file, resulting from 5. dxc5, will benefit White, who will occupy D1 with a rook and exert pressure along the length of it, especially endangering Black´s D-pawn.

Other continuations are less energetic. For instance: 5...g6

Black develops another piece before recapturing the pawn.

6.d3

Somewhere about this stage, the amateur wants things to happen. He begins to look around for surprise moves. The great master, in the same situation, is content to make simple moves. He knows that if he keeps on bringing pieces into play, there will be no need to look for winning combinations. They will evolve naturally out of the position!

6...Bg7 7.Nd2

The aggressive 7. Bg5 is more usual, to pin the knight and keep Black under pressure, but no fault can be found with this method of development. It looks mild, but the bishop surveys an important diagonal and bears down on D6 (applies pressure), a tender spot in Black's position.

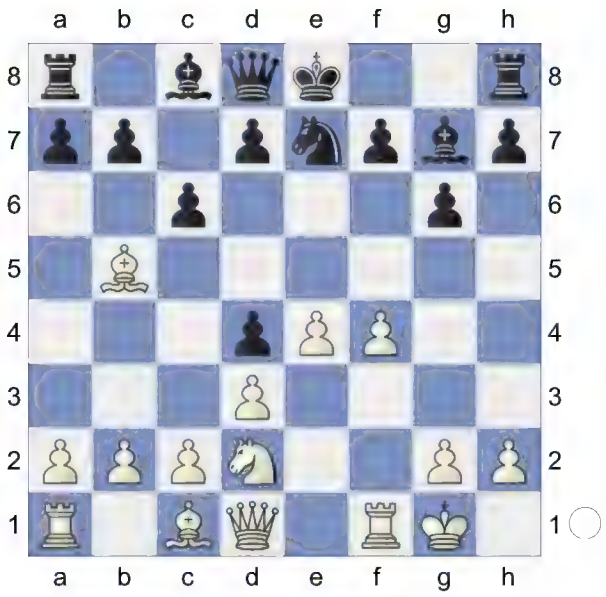
(Diagram)



9.Bc4 0.16/20
Yet another modest move, but it is packed with more energy than you might suspect. It accomplishes these objectives:
1) it activates a piece, by getting it off the first rank;
2) it develops the bishop at E2 so that it can move to F3 and attack the centre;
3) it clears away the kingside, making early castling possible;
4) it prepares the cooperation of the rooks on the ftrst rank, subsequent to castling.
[9.f5!± 0.56/21]
9...d5?!= (0.80)
In contrast to White's classically simple method of development, Black moves the same bishop a third time in the opening, in order to inflict his opponent with an isolated pawn. Such an attempt is premature in view of Black's incomplete development. 10.Bb3
The king is made secure, while the H1-rook moves closer to the centre, the theatre of action. The rook, of course, will try to seize an open ftle, or, if none is available, one which is likely to be opened.
10...0-0
The bishop has moved four times to make this exchange for a knight that has moved only once! So much shifting around of one piece indicates that the strategy behind it must be faulty.
11.Nf3
Despite White's doubled C-pawn, he enjoys these advantages:
1) he has two active bishops against Black's knight and bishop;
2) all of his minor pieces are in play while Black still has a bishop on the flrst rank;
3) his rooks are in touch with each other and ready to seize the half-open B- and D-files;
4) his king is safe in a corner while Black's is out in the open;
5) his queen is ideally posted and has more influence on the centre than does Black's, standing at the side of the board;
6) an exchange of pawns in the centre (which looks inevitable) will open lines of attack, a circumstance that favours the player whose development is superior - in this case, White;
7) he maintains the initiative.

11...c5
One of Black's difficulties is resolved with his king's escape to safer quarters.

12.e5
Another of those subtle moves, whose purpose the average player usually fails to see. "What use is it", he says, "to waste a rook move in attacking a pawn that is adequately protected?"
True, the pawn is defended, but by a bishop which cannot develop without abandoning the pawn. Sooner or later, Black will be compelled to play ... b6, or have three pieces on his first rank interfering with each other. There are drawbacks to ... b6, though, for example Black's queen will be cut off and prevented from returning to the kingside and the defence of the king. In addition, his C6-knight' s position will be insecure, once the prop (the B7-pawn) is removed from under it.
White's move is simple and quiet, but it exerts uncomfortable pressure on Black's queenside, makes normal development difficult, and creates permanent weaknesses which lend themselves to exploitation. 12...b5?!
Black wants to develop his bishop, and for that purpose he must play ... b6, but, to do so at once might endanger the queen by cutting off her line of retreat.
13.c3
With the posting of this rook on the partly open D-file, White's development has been completed in an ideal way, every piece taking its best post in no more than one move. White has not so much as hinted at an attacking combination until every piece has been put to work.
13...c4
To enable the bishop to come out. The advance of the pawn takes away the C6-knight's support.
Guarding the B-pawn by 13 ... Qe7 instead does not help much, since the bishop cannot develop at D7 next move without cutting off the queen's protection of the pawn. Nor can Black try to simplify by 13 ... dxc4 as the reply 14. Bd6 wins the exchange.
14.Bc2
The attack begins! The first blow destroys Black's pawn-centre.
14...dxc3 (1.80) 15.bxc3!
A master stroke! The brutal threat of 16. Qxh7# disguises the two real purposes of the move: the strategic concept of forcing Black to move one of his kingside pawns, thereby loosening the defensive structure; and the clearance of the F6-square for the benefit of the dark-squared bishop, who will bear down heavily on the long diagonal.
15...Qa5?! (3.60)
Black staves off (EVITA) the mate, but it weakens his E-pawn and ties the bishop down to its defence. 16.Bd2!
This arrangement of bishops gives them tremendous raking power along the two parallel diagonals.
White's chief threat is 17. Rxd5 exd5 18. Bxd5+ Kh8 19. Bxc6, followed by 20. Bxa8, sweeping away a good part of Black's army.
16...Bg4?!
The queen rushes to the aid of the vulnerable knights. This is what happens on other defences: After Black's actual move, he seems to have escaped the worst, but White has an ingenious way to get at the knights: 17.d4!
This stab at the knight looks harmless, the pawn being pinned and unable to capture, but the point of 17. c4 is to use the pawn to support an attack by 18. Rb5. This will drive the queen off and make the capture 19. cxd5 possible.

The combinations now appear in quick succession.
17...Qb6 (6.80)
Counterattack on the queen. All other attempts at defence fail, 18.Rb1
White's queen must move, but the threat of 19. Bd6 hangs over Black.
18...a6
Not only because there is no other antidote to 19. Bd6, but with the hope of curbing the terrible bishops by putting obstacles in their paths.
19.h3!
This starts a beautiful combination at one end of the board which culminates in a queen sacrifice followed by a smothered mate over at the other end!

C61: Ruy Lopez: Bird's Defence

Shankland,Samuel: 'Early in my chess career, I was an e4 player. I had been told that it was the best match for my aggressive style. As I got more mature, I realized that I was feeling very at home against the Sicilian and the French, but I had no idea how to play against e5 (or c6, but this is for another day!). Ultimately, when I was about 2400 FIDE, I started making the transition from 1. e4 to 1.d4 as an antidote to my difficulties meeting 1...e5. As of now, I have been playing d4 almost exclusively for a couple years. However, with all the unsatisfying games I had in the Scotch or the King's Gambit behind me, I think that I will learn a lot by studying the Ruy Lopez, both in terms of improving my understanding in positions that don't come as naturally to me and potentially reincorporating 1.e4 back into my repertoire. After some discussions with Chess Informant, it has been agreed that I will present some of the fruits of my analysis of the Ruy Lopez as I properly learn it for the first time. I should mention, this series is aimed at finding the best plans for white and it is done from white's perespective, but I will try to be as objective as possible in my evaluations. I believe that with any new opening, it is most important to learn the sidelines first, so we will start off where black deviates from the normal 3...a6 or 3...Nf6, in particular with regard to the Nd4 motif. Enjoy! Assessment of the position

Now that White has achieved the doubling of his rooks, his next aim is obvious: the annoying d4 pawn is to be
